

Answer the following questions - what affected you the most? Did you identify with any of his messages?

I think what affected me most was how real he was with the audience. He was giving this big lecture where he was funny, emotional, and overall genuine. Not that people aren't genuine or true in character when giving talks like this. It's hard to connect with them and he was quite easy to connect with. His messages were so powerful and he was very insightful. The power of enthusiasm is one that i really connected with/loved because it led into "experience is what you get when you didn't get what you wanted." it's not something that i think of enough enough but it's so true. Everything happens for a reason and to start thinking of the lack of experiences in my life as the experience itself is something that could really change my mindset.
